Are you psycho-logical?

If Yes, These Quizzes Are Sure To Play With Your Mind

Scroll through the following statements and use the scale to either agree or disagree with each: "Are you going through a psychological turmoil whether people like you or not?" "Are you the one with an attitude problem?" Or "Are you looking for a lucky number or colour?" Have you taken such psychological quizzes to discover yourself? If the answer is yes, then the possibilities are that you are psychologically inclined. And attempting such quizzes just make you unsure, think and wonder about your own self. You are bound to overthink and be bamboozled.

Senseless stimulation

Buzzfeed's buzz and quizzes about your EQ and IQ, logic and intellect, your celebrity doppelganger according to your zodiac, or the Goddess you embody, tosses everyone's brains upside down. Be it an emotional wreck, or a happy-go-lucky person, the sentiments these quizzes evoke, are magical and mythical enough for our minds to seek answers bespoke.

Blooper-natural Quizzes

Some quizzes are out of the world. Like, "Which supernatural creature are you?", "Who were you in your past life?" and the list goes on. The aura of mystery and intrigue and the craving for the unknown only results in you always clicking the button 'to find out deeper truths about yourself'.

Colourful Auras

Existence of auras isn't scientifically proven, but all these quizzes show that girly pink, innocent orange, aqua-baby blue or bold black, define our personality or so, we let them to. This aura theory has billions of takers across the globe. When the 5:00 am babaji's astronomical predictions go down and sleep, the colour quizzes climb all their way up the perplexed quiz taker and gain a hold of their minds and thoughts.

The Number Game

Numerology is an ancient science but it seems to be really catching up with the curiosity of the modern minds. The numbers help people sort their lives in a mathematical manner and look at their problems like an equation. The solution lies in simple calculations. "Which number is lucky for you?" has more takers than the kids who like solving math problems in school.

No matter how imbecile these quizzes are, the truth is that with their luring USP, they have crawled up internet trends. Such fun quizzes only increase your curiosity when you click on the button 'I am done' and the result is awaited.

Obviously!

Allergic To Silly Questions?

Anika Joshi, AIS Vas 1, IX

"Are you reading GT?" "No, I am making an airplane out of it." Of course, you don't say that. You rather opt for a sophisticated expression of your annoyance - "Obviously" along with a smirk (all you can afford). And there's no end to these extremely annoying questions with seemingly obvious answers. Don't believe it? Read for yourself.

When you clearly have got a haircut and they ask "Did you get a haircut?"

No, actually they caught fire!

When they see a kennel and ask "Do you have a dog?"

No, the kennel there is for me and my sister.

When you eat something hot and they ask "Is it hot?"

"No, it's freezing my mouth."

When they see you at the cinema and ask "What are you doing here?"

"I'm here to pay my school fees. And you?"

When you got braces and they ask "Did you get braces?"

"No, I actually am chewing stapler pins. Wanna try?"

When you're standing at the end of the queue and they ask "Is this the end of line?"

"No, this is not the end, it rather begins from here."

When a woman wearing high heels steps on your feet and asks "Does that hurt?"

"No, I am a ghost. Try again?"

Let's burn the annoyers with our cool answers! winks

Tele-flopping

Gleaming Smiles, Life With Style, All Is Well In The World Of Teleshopping

Shreya Duggal

Here's a tribute to our 3 a.m. friend, our very own TELESHPING. People in those infomercials are always so enthusiastic that they light up your world in a jiffy. The best part is that they talk to 'You' only. These captivating infomercials lure us into a deep rabbit hole.

Laugh out loud

The minute you tune into an infomercial, you end up laughing as the super cheery anchor is so excited. They make you think like a proton - always positive. Selling it loud, they make you believe that if happiness is what you want then buy their miracle product and the world will be perfect, thanks to them.

So, if you are feeling sad, tune into an infomercial and split yourself with laughter at their funny actions and voice modulations.

Follow the leader

When the whole world seems to be falling for the mouth watering offers - 'Buy 2, get accessories free'. Soon guilt steps in and a feeling of being incomplete without the product seeps through you. The visuals of a bechari grihani tiresomely slicing carrots in one scene, compared to the same lady smiling cheek to cheek as she chops carrots perfectly and effortlessly in the next; instills in you a deep desire to buy that product, irrespective of whether you really would need to slice carrots everyday. A real irony!

Newton with a twist

Ever noticed all the elaborate scientific facts given to convince us? Right from the treasures of Ayurveda to the latest stem cell research reports, they stop at nothing to make you believe that their product is the next groundbreaking invention of modern science. Sir Isaac Newton too must be turning around in his grave restlessly.

As seen on TV

Desperation now enslaves you and you order the product. When it arrives you open it and surprise! (Or shock?) Inside the box wrapped in bubble wrap is your coveted item, which will change your life forever. Dreamy-eyed about happily ever after, you start using your miracle item. But wait did magic happen? Remember, "Oh God! This is magic just like shown on TV," said no one ever. History is the witness to this and so are we.
