Proceedings: Well researched and finely suited, the novices were ready for the first day, aspiring to make AIMUN'18 a huge and memorable success. Day one witnessed the highly confident and poised delegates debating on their first agenda. Issues like false dichotomy and smaller states not getting their share as allocated in the national budget were brought to the limelight.

A deliberation regarding the fund sion: Body which dedistribution by BJP in the northern as well as the southern Indian states ruled the committee session for a majority of the time on the first day. This is where Article 280 of the Constitution was brought in, which states that within a duration of five years, the President will constitute a body called the Finance Commission¹ (FC). The first day also acted as a warming-up session for the delegates as they went about understanding and learning new procedures, discussing many issues en route.

Day two of the committee saw the delegates debate on the second agenda, 'Amendments to Citizenship Act (NRC Issue)'. Well-researched arguments ruled the roost once again. The debate thus began with opening statements, along with a special emphasis on whether India could benefit debates were full of tension as well as information but not devoid of witticisms. The session concluded on a positive note with the delegates, especially those from Chandigarh, expressing their gratitude for this wonderful opportunity to gain information and learn. GII

Proceedings: The General Assembly took the phrase 'bigger and better' quite literally as they returned for their run at AIMUN 2018 with nearly 125 delegates. The suited, booted and all fired up delegates presented the stance of their country through bold statements on various subtopics like 'Role of international community in foreign aid', 'Rebuilding of security in post conflict society', 'Economic growth in post conflict societies' and 'Political and judicial reforms' amongst others.

There was a comprehensive discussion and even an unmoderated caucus1 on USA's intervention in Afghanistan and the Rwanda case study. The question of unemployment and job security was prioritised, as it was the center of attention for most of the countries. Humanitarian relief and political legitimacy were also discussed quite thoroughly, and the delegates acted in breaking through the walls of convention and ditching the regular everyday tie to wear one made of glass.

But the true climax of the movie came

grabbed their popcorns as partnerships revealed themselves. Various international articles, treaties, and UN reports, along with the use of technical terms were thrown around the room. The third day came with another suspenseful climax as few delegates were in a frenzy to find themselves signatories and sponsors for their draft resolutions. The committee was mainly divided into three blocs: USA-Germany bloc, China-Finland bloc, and India-Belgium bloc. Naturally, heated arguments ensued between the blocs, each trying to convince the other of their morality and effectiveness. Each went around the committee, lobbying and eventually garnering support. Each of the blocs' DR was discussed in depth and garnered support, making it even more difficult to vote only for one.

The three day discourse witnessed vibrant energy and constructive deliberations and negotiations. The committee was no less than an actionpacked movie, every second of which was full of enthusiasm. GIT
